Immediately on the caving in of the shaft an alarm was given, and the miners from other parts of the mine, led by Captain Williams, hurried to the scene and set to work to remove the rock and make an entrance.

The work was slow, as the rock has to be loaded into ore buckets, hoisted to the surface and dumped, and as the work progressed the half suffocated cries of the miners could be heard growing fainter and fainter. About 9 a. m. an entrance was made and thirteen miners were rescued from the drift of the shaft uninjured.
